

...a place where they can train and be healthy, and a place where they can interact

...one in Merrylands which is central to Cumberland, LGA but is something that will be used by our youth."

☐ The hunt is on for a new PCYC site in Merrylands - somewhere for youth to express themselves, be supported, train and be healthy.

Actor hoping to take on world after win

THEATRE and film sets around the world are closed for business but that hasn't stopped Auburn-born Jack Ngu's passion for performing. And he has now been selected for the World Monologue Games Regional Finals, one of 14 global events featuring the best international competitors from over 80 countries.

When Jack received an email announcing he had made it to the Regional Finals, he was over the moon. "It's tough knowing that the world is competing and watching but I'm excited and honoured to represent the Asian Australian talent in this amazing event," he said.

World Monologue Games is only in its first year but already attracted thousands of international performers. Ngu will be performing a piece about being an Australian born Chinese. "I really love this monologue because it expresses an underlying slice of life that cuts deep every day for Asian youth," he said.

"It was written by a friend, Forest Lin, and he really put me through the wringer. Although short, I really hope my performance is engaging and stirs some thought."

The Regional Finals will be live-streamed and uploaded later this month, with the winners of each category competing in the Global Finals in front of hundreds of thousands of performing arts fans. To find out more or tune in, go to monologues.com.au.

☐ Jack Ngu.

OPENING HOURS:
Monday to Thursday: 7am-4pm
Friday 7am-5pm | Saturday 7am-1pm

SHOP

Actor hoping to take on world after win

THEATRE and film sets around the world are closed for business but that hasn't stopped Auburn-born Jack Ngu's passion for performing.

And he has now been selected for the World Monologue Games Regional Finals, one of 14 global events featuring the best international competitors from over 80 countries. When Jack received an email announcing he had made it to the Regional Finals, he was over the moon.

"It's tough knowing that the world is competing and watching but I'm excited and honoured to represent the Asian Australian talent in this amazing event," he said.

World Monologue Games is only in its first year but already attracted thousands of international performers.

Ngu will be performing a piece about being an Australian born Chinese.

"I really love this monologue because it expresses an underlying slice of life that cuts deep every day for Asian youth," he said.

"It was written by a friend, Forest Lin, and he really put me through to the wringer. Although short, I really hope my performance is engaging and stirs some thought."

The Regional Finals will be live-streamed and uploaded later this month, with the winners of each category competing in the Global Finals in front of hundreds of thousands of performing arts fans.

To find out more or tune in, go to monologues.com.au.